

Rosales, Opus 11

Portland, Oregon

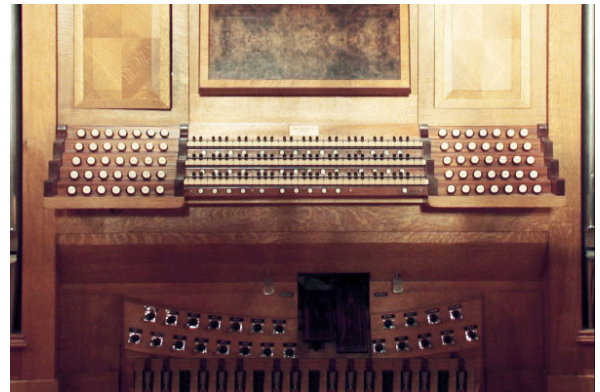

This American eclectic 85 rank, 54 stop organ resides at Trinity Episcopal Cathedral in Portland, Oregon and was built in 1984-1987 by Manuel Rosales, one of the most inspired organ builders in the United States.

Although inspired by French Cathedral organs, especially St. Sulpice in Paris, this instrument is not a copy of any existing organ. Rather it is Rosales's own statement with a lot of power, energy, clarity of speech, and rich and exuberant ensembles. In the arch at the front of the transept, full organ was measured at an impressive 109db. The 93mm of wind for this organ is regulated by three large bellows and wind stabilizers that can be turned off as desired for 17th-18th century literature. This feature is replicated in the virtual organ sample set.

Hearing this organ is a visceral experience thanks to the exciting fire of its reeds. But its awesome power is matched by its beauty, with many delicate details such as the presence of both a Bourdon 8 and Flute Harmonique 8 on the swell, a harmonic flute chorus of 8-4-2, and meticulous voicing throughout the organ that allows many stops to serve as colorful solo stops.

Barbara Owen, organ historian, characterized the organ as “neo-Baroque in concept, with a Romantic gesture.”
